

Handling Serious Accidents at Live Events

This is a one day course aimed principally at operations staff in the events and exhibitions industry who would have the responsibility of handling a serious accident on site. Ideally delegates should already have completed the IOSH Safe Management at Live Events Course or be scheduled to attend it and have some operational experience at events and exhibitions.

In house courses cost £1,200.

Places on open courses are available at £350 per delegate.

Objectives - At the end of the course delegates will:

- understand the full potential legal implications of a serious accident
- be able to devise a serious accident handling procedure for their organisation
- be prepared to deal first hand with enforcement authorities on site such as the HSE
- be able to supervise the investigation of a serious accident.

Course Content

- The importance of planning and procedures to deal with a serious accident
- Legal Implications. This will be based on UK law but will reference how this may apply overseas. It will look particularly at powers of enforcement authorities and corporate manslaughter
- Handling accidents - immediate action, reporting, recording, investigating and taking witness statements
- Handling investigations (being on the receiving end) immediate action, legal rights and legal privilege, being interviewed, collating evidence to hand to authorities
- Wider considerations of a major incident such as media and welfare issues
- The day concludes with a series of table top exercises to consolidate the training.
